September 9, 2018 Meeting Features Jack Naylor Retrospective
1:30 P.M., Woman’s Club Workshop, 72 Columbus St., Newton Highlands MA

PHSNE Life Member Jack Naylor (1919-2007) gave an interesting talk at a PHSNE meeting on June 12, 2004. A digital recording of that presentation will be shared at the September meeting, along with videos and anecdotes that will fascinate all and evoke pleasant memories for those who knew Naylor. One of the videos, the last he made, was designed to sell his vast collection.

Naylor was a very active member of PHSNE for many years and had much to do with the success of the organization. The Board of Directors will present the retrospective, and members who knew Jack are invited to share their stories.

Letter from the President

Dear PHSNE Members,

The Photographic Historical Society of New England is important to us all - in addition to the joy of finding new treasures at Photographica, the camaraderie with other members at events, and sorting incoming and outgoing donations at the warehouse, we have a diverse membership and are on solid financial footing.

I took over the presidency in January when Walter Friesendorf stepped down after a two year term. Assuming the presidency was an honor, but also concerning in that we did not have a candidate for Vice President. – which means that nobody is training for or preparing to take on the presidency when I leave the office.

In the search to find new leaders, PHSNE will reach out to organizations in the Boston area involved with analog photography, including educational institutions, museums, and photo-service providers. Some have already expressed a desire for a more substantial relationship. I plan to ask someone who works on building boards for ideas about how we might recruit candidates. PHSNE might also consider hiring an individual, at least on an interim basis. Any PHSNE member interested in taking on a leadership role should contact me. My estimate of the time required for the vice-presidency is two to three hours a week.

There are other opportunities to take an active role in PHSNE. Consider what the leadership and volunteers undertake: managing the warehouse; publishing the Journal, Snapshots, and other material; membership operations and publishing the Membership Directory; managing the website and social media; traveling the byways of New England to rescue camera equipment that might otherwise be discarded; processing donations of equipment and supplies; putting on events—member meetings, Photographica, open and members’ auctions; and managing financial operations and investments—filing required state and federal forms.

Responses to this letter would be welcome.

Respectfully,
Joel Moses – President, PHSNE
A Wealth of New England Exhibits

Several exhibits in New England are of interest to PHSNE members. Select one or more, and enjoy your visits.

Women in World War II: On the Home Fronts and the Battlefronts, International Museum of World War II, Natick, MA, through October 7, 2018. The exhibit “highlights women in every major combatant nation and the vital contributions they made on home fronts and battlefronts. . . . The Museum will also be displaying, for the first time ever, a series of original Ansel Adams photographs that document the role of women as part of the war effort in Massachusetts. . . . These photographs reflect a departure from Adams’ well-known landscape photographs.” https://tinyurl.com/yaphs8cf.

Sally Mann: A Thousand Crossings, Peabody Essex Museum, Salem, MA., ends September 23, 2018. “For more than forty years, Sally Mann has made experimental and hauntingly beautiful images that have made her one of the country’s most influential and distinguished photographers. The artist’s first major traveling exhibition explores themes of family memory, mortality, and home, as well as the Southern landscape as a repository of personal and collective memory. Some 115 photographs . . . offer a sweeping overview of Mann’s artistic achievement, vision, and drive.” Visit https://www.pem.org/.

Winslow Homer and the Camera: Photography and the Art of Painting, Bowdoin College Museum of Art, Brunswick, ME, through October 28, 2018. “Homer (1836-1910) owned several cameras, two of which are in the show. He made occasional use of them for his painting, relying on them as he might rely on drawing and watercolor: as a form of preparatory sketch or aid to memory. Photography also had commercial appeal. As early as the 1880s, Homer was having photographs taken of his paintings. On occasion, he’d have the reproductions mounted and he’d sign them, further enhancing their value.” Visit https://tinyurl.com/yc78foa7.

Farewell to Canon Film Cameras and Leica M-7

The URL tells the whole story: visit https://petapixel.com/2018/05/30/canon-is-now-out-of-the-film-camera-business-after-80-years/ to read a May posting by Michael Zhang documenting the final sales of the Canon EOS-IV, the last film camera the firm manufactured.

In recent years, as Canon’s production turned to digital cameras, all of its film cameras except for the EOS-IV were discontinued. It stopped production of that camera in 2010 but continued to sell those already manufactured. The company will continue to repair the EOS-IV until fall of 2025 as long as parts are available.

Also in May, a similar announcement was made about the Leica M7, and once again, the URL of the posting by Damien Demolder told the story: https://www.dpreview.com/news/9619099508/leica-m7-film-camera-comes-to-an-end. After 16 years on the market, Leica is discontinuing the M7 but, as with the Canon EOS-IV, it will continue to sell cameras while there is still inventory. The very high-end camera is priced at about $5,000. Custom-built models will be unavailable. Leica lovers will be happy to know that the Leica MP and M-A cameras are still being manufactured.

According to Demolder, “The M7 caused a bit of a stir when it arrived with features that required battery power to operate – particularly the electronic shutter.

Without power, users are restricted to shutter speeds of 1/60sec and 1/125sec, whereas models before the M7 had used an entirely mechanical shutter and could therefore continue working in the event of a flat battery - or no battery.”

Fortunately, Nikon is still producing two film cameras, the high-end pro model F6 and the enthusiast model FM10. See http://imaging.nikon.com/lineup/filmcamera/.

PHSNE members often want to reach out to other collectors and photo historians for assistance. They may be looking for a particular part, information about an unusual camera, identification of an image, or just want to share an interesting anecdote about a special find.

Snap shots would like to initiate a column to help PHSNE members connect with each other. The column would appear periodically, whenever there is a request or response.

To launch the column, we are printing requests from two PHSNE members who are reaching out to fellow photo historians for assistance.

Ryck Lent is working on an article about Berenice Abbott’s work and life in New England, and is seeking background information on a "small format" camera from the German manufacturer Curt Bentzin. He writes, “Abbott used this camera from around 1929 - 1932 to take snapshots and photographic notes which evolved into her famous Changing New York project.

Only a few images Abbott made during the early period have been published. Those I’ve seen appear to be contact prints from roll film negatives with an aspect ratio of 3:2 (6 x 9) or even wider. One Bentzin model she might have used is the Primar Folding. Suggestions, information about and examples of Curt Bentzin cameras would be most welcome.” Please send responses to snapshots@phsne.org. We will forward them to Ryck and publish them if possible.

The second request comes from new PHSNE member, Dwight Cleveland who is looking for movie coming attraction glass slides. If you have any, or can help him locate them, please contact Dwight directly at posterboss@aol.com or 773-525-9152.

Members frequently send interesting links to blogs and podcasts they come across. A few are selected each month for the online version of snap shots, but space is limited. Some may be worth describing in greater detail and sharing with fellow PHSNE members. The column could also be a vehicle for sharing interesting resources, and we encourage members to email the links to snapshots@phsne.org.

Join the conversation if you have information for Ryck or Dwight, a question or interesting anecdote related to collecting or photohistory, or a link to a resource worth sharing with PHSNE members.
Kodakery Revisited:

An Old Name for a New Service

Remember Kodakery? At one time it was a “monthly periodical about photography, a journal for amateur photographers published by the Eastman Kodak Company Rochester, New York. . . . The first issue was published in September, 1913 and the last in 1932. Every purchaser of a Kodak Brownie camera received a free one year subscription.” . . . All issues of the publication are believed to be in the public domain today and many are available online” (http://camera-wiki.org/wiki/Kodakery). The Kodakery title was later used for a Kodak employee newsletter.

Recently, Kodak launched a series of podcasts that may be of interest to photo historians and film shooters which it dubbed The Kodakery. Podcast subjects include History in Technicolor, History of Mid-Century American Culture From Photography on Vinyl LP Covers, The History of the Iconic Colorama Display, and more. The podcasts can be accessed at https://tinyurl.com/ycpezgeg.

Start by listening to the 100th episode for background about the podcasts and samples of various episodes. If you have a favorite podcast on analog photography, send the URL to snapshots@phsne.org. Depending on space available, it might be published in the online version of snap shots or shared in the new Conversation Column (as noted on page 3).
